A brief note on how to interpret the tables and graphical information above:

The statistics section at the top of each segment of question analysis shows the number of valid responses (where someone provided an answer) and the number of missing responses (where the respondent did not give an answer).

The frequency tables for each question, below the statistics table, indicate the number and percentage of respondents who chose each option.

- The Frequency (1) and Percent (2) columns in the tables indicate (1) the number of responses in each response option and (2) the percentage of respondents who chose each response option. Both columns include the missing answers for that question as part of the total response set. In short, Frequency is how many people gave the answer and Percent is the portion of people who answered the questionnaire in general that gave the answer.
- The Valid Percent column indicates the percentage of responses in each option out of those who did respond to the question. For example, if in a survey of 80 respondents, 70 answered Question 1 and 20 of those respondents chose Option A, the valid percent for Option A would be 28.6%, calculated by dividing the 20 given responses by the 70 valid responses to the question and ignoring the 10 missing responses. In short, Valid Percent is the portion of people who chose an answer out of those who answered the question.
- The Cumulative Percent column informs about the percent of responses that fall in multiple categories. For example, for level of agreement questions, if the cumulative percent in the 'Agree' row is 60%, it means that 60% of respondents either chose 'Agree' or the row above it, 'Agree Strongly'. In short, Cumulative Percent groups the valid percent of multiple answers into a larger portion out of the question respondents.

The bar and pie charts for the different results are graphical representations of the valid percentages of each response for a question and can be read as such.
